Business Expo

The Valley Business Expo will be combined with the Greater Van Nuys Area Chamber of Commerce May Mixer at the Sportsmen's Lodge today from 4 to 8 p.m.

More than 60 area business and companies will be participating in the event.

This event is sponsored by Valley College, the Daily News, KGIL Radio, Valley Economic Development Center and the Greater Van Nuys Chamber of Commerce.

The Expo will feature automobile displays and hourly drawings. There will be a no-host bar and hors d'oeuvres.

Anyone interested in volunteering in the Valley College booth should call Pat Hodges, director of the Center for the Advancement of Business, Labor and Education at ext. 332.

Professors to debate at Political Awareness Festival

The Valiant Democrats Club of Valley College is sponsoring a Political Awareness Day on Wednesday, May 23. A variety of speakers, including representatives from ACLU and the Sierra Club, will be speaking on political issues in Monarch Hall from 6 to 9 p.m.

A debate on capital punishment by Jack Sterk, professor of speech, and Farrel Broslawsky, professor of political science, will be held in Monarch hall at 10 a.m.

Issue tables, a political information booth and a voter registration table will be in Monarch Square during the day.

Potential
students try to face fearsBy DORA ROMAN
Assoc. News Editor

Disabled Valley students spoke of opportunities and gave encouragement to help break the many fears and myths they had once encountered.

A group of 25 disabled students from various high schools, including Birmingham and San Fernando, visited Valley on Wednesday.

"The purpose of their visit each year is to make these students aware of the many facilities, special programs and different types of support we offer," said Dr. Robert Scott, Assistant Dean of Disabled Student Programs and Services.

"The students have many potential opportunities to become successful."

The highlight of the event was student panelist Eddy Perry, who spoke about his experiences in college and his excitement about his acceptance to UCLA.

The students viewed videos dealing with different cases of disabilities as well as things they should know about college— coping

T.V. anchor Marlow to speak today

By AVI OBLIGENARZ
Staff Writer

Jess Marlow, KNBC-TV anchor and commentator, will be the Key-note Speaker today at 11 a.m. in Monarch Hall. Marlow will speak on the recent Perestroika process in the Soviet Union and its affect on Eastern Europe.

The presentation, by Marlow, will be followed by a short question and answer period as part of Journalism

Day in the fourth annual Arts Festival at Valley College.

The Arts Festival is being celebrated in a great Greek tradition, which originated about 3,000 years ago. "The Greeks used to put on a vibrant, comic festival," said Bill Wallis, English department representative on the festival planning committee. "... with poetry, songs, dances and play presentations."

The festival opened yesterday, on campus, with Children's Art and Art Gallery Awards exhibitions.

Both the campus radio and television stations, KVCM and KVTU, will open their studios, to the public, for tours and demonstrations.

An Art Pottery Sale was conducted in Monarch Square. However, the seventh annual Talent Show, held last night, had the biggest turnout.

"We have a lot of high school ... and junior [high school] students coming [to Valley]," said Wallis.

"So, the Arts Festival not only serves as a cultural event," explained Wallis, "but as an event, that will introduce our school to many students who otherwise would not know [about Valley]."

A marathon of poetry reading is open to both faculty and students for reading or listening, today at noon in the Fireside Room.

Videoscreening of student videos and films will take place today at noon in Humanities 110.

Tomorrow has been dubbed as "Dance Day" in the festival. Throughout the day, various dance classes and programs will be in the dance studio of the Women's Gym.

The festival will conclude with Jazz On a Saturday Afternoon with Don Kerian and Friends and Sunday's Gala Year End Concert.

All events are free, except Once Upon A Mattress and the Gala Year End Concert. All events are open to the public.

"There is something for everybody [at the festival]," said Wallis.

STAR EDITORIAL There's always room for improvements at Valley

On campus suggestion boxes could restore facilities and hinder administrative apathy

Cleaning the drinking fountains—replacing unreadable directories—painting bungalows—installing ramps for the handicapped—re-painting the traffic lines in the parking lots—improving the quality of the food at the cafeteria and snack bar.

These are all complaints that everyone of us have heard voiced. For a comfortable educational environment, it's imperative for such improvements to be considered and, eventually, enacted.

The Star proposes the installment of suggestion boxes. These boxes could not only be placed in the cafeteria and ASU office, but in front of Dr. Mary Lee's office as well.

Of course there will always be the sly fox that will suggest disgusting and unruly things. However, the Star feels suggestions of such a nature should be expected and ignored.

Members and/or chairpersons can collect the weekly suggestions and pass them on to Lee, who can then decide if such suggestions can be enacted. Following this, Lee could list the reasons for her decisions in the following issue of the Star.

Having suggestion boxes will not perform miracles, but at least it will awaken some administrative officials and make them aware of students' concerns, problems and needs. Moreover, suggestion boxes would give students the satisfaction of having a direct linkage with Valley's administrative officials.

If Valley is to look and function properly, suggestion boxes should be installed immediately. The ASU could and should get behind such a program.

No pain-no gain for old timer

By JUDITH WAXMAN
Staff Writer

Knowledge is power; but what do I know? I know if you don't get older, wiser and healthier, you just get older ... maybe.

Now don't get me wrong. It isn't that I want to grow older but old folks are worth a fortune; they have silver in their hair, gold in their teeth, stones in their kidneys, lead in their feet and gas in their stomachs.

Moreover, the story is that older people have lots of company, seeing, at least, five people every day. Will Power helps them out of bed. Soon, they go see John. Then Charley Horse comes along and whenever he leaves, Arthur Itis shows up. Arthur Itis goes from joint to joint, making them really tired and glad to go to bed with Ben Gay.

Somehow, old age is always 15 years older than I am. Yet, it's true you can't turn back the clock but you can wind it up again.

Wanting to stay in the race and

"I hate it, but wanting to be healthy, I go, knowing it's good for me and when you're over the hill, you pick up speed."

knowing that if I don't use it I lose it, that exercise is where it's at, I made three related New Year's resolutions—to shed fat; to slash cholesterol; to stay fit—and I joined a health club.

Sagging and dragging, I enter, seeing other member's perfect figures and hearing conflicting advice: "It's a great day; have a good workout."

After changing into my sweats and lacing up my sneakers, I'm ready, willing and ... well, two out of three ain't bad.

Then I hear the sound of pounding, pulsating music. Usually pressed for time, I propel myself around the room, pausing once, pushing onward. Sucking on a Life Saver, I stand on the Lifestep and sit on the Lifecycle, pedaling nine minutes—and panting 10.

Punished for my peccadilloes and doing penance for my pounds, I become religious: "Oh, God," I gasp.

Three times a week, while muscle men pump iron and glamour girls press weights, I grunt, groan and grimace and stretch, strain and sweat, strengthening my cardiovascular system. I hate it, but wanting to be healthy, I go, knowing it's good for me and when you're over the hill, you pick up speed.

Although I haven't lost much weight, I've firmed up and feel better. And I'm already victorious; although I'm older than I've ever been before, I'm also younger than I'll ever be again.

Victim of domestic violence cries for public awareness and help

By JAE LEVINE-SCHNEIDER
Staff Writer

A violent battering episode in which both my son and I were injured finally convinced me to leave my abusive husband.

Determined to use our son as a weapon against me, my husband filed for custody. Although under more normal circumstances both parents are encouraged to have supportive access to the children, I soon learned that custody is often also used by batterers as a means to continue their abuse and control.

Given my circumstances, it never occurred to me that the court would do anything less than aid me in protecting my son from further abuse.

Fortunately, Susanne Foran, the court mediator in my case, was both spond to conciliation and feel safe from harassment. Most, however, have no idea just what kind of terrifying violence is involved.

It is frightening to realize that men who cannot control their violence against women, and teach that behavioral response to their children, may be seen as the better parent by professionals ignorant of how abuse is learned and perpetuated.

"Similarly," Walker concludes, "judges need to be educated to the emotional trauma and fear unsupervised visitation brings to the abuser's children."

Even in less volatile separations, court-ordered custody arrangements can only provide "least-word" solutions. In cases where there has been a history of domestic violence, insensitive court-ordered custody

Pincus says, "What we are talking about is trying to provide safe visitation. And it is very clear that the batterer should never be able to pick up or deliver kids at mom's place or have free telephone access to the family."

Monitored visitation is probably necessary in the vast majority of these cases. Joint custody ... allows and encourages the conflict to continue and reinforces the value of violence, disrespect and degradation."

Clearly, reforms of court-ordered custody arrangements are a crucial step in stopping the perpetuation of abuse. Family courts must be educated in the dynamics of battering and child abuse in order to become sensitive to the choices they have to either help or hinder victims.

Domestic violence custody orders may not seem to be a relevant issue for the average college student. Why should you be concerned?

The statistics speak for themselves: 50 percent of all women in this country will experience some form of domestic abuse in their lifetime.

Approximately seventy percent of children growing up in violent environments have been directly abused themselves and virtually one hundred percent of these kids have been emotionally abused growing up in the chaos of a volatile household.

Moreover, 99 percent of all death row inmates came from violent homes. Studies clearly show that battering environments plant the informed and sensitive to issues regarding domestic violence. I was awarded full custody. My husband was only permitted supervised visitation monitored by a therapist specializing in family violence.

Because of the protection I received through the court, I was able to keep my husband from contacting, harassing or threatening me.

During their joint therapy sessions together, my son was safe to confront his abuser without fear of physical or emotional retaliation. He was permitted ultimately to refuse further contact with his father.

As a result, both my son and I have been able to put the past behind us and resume our lives free of fear.

I have since learned that although my abusive relationship was not unique, my custody arrangement is tragically uncommon.

In her book, The Battered Woman Syndrome, Lenore Walker explains, "Battered women can be so intimidated by court-appointed professionals assigned to complete an evaluation to help the judge decide, that they perform poorly and may lose custody."

Mediation programs which have been successful in averting bitter fights in nonviolent families are not as useful for violent ones. The men can be overpowering in negotiations and the women can feel pushed into settlements simply to avert another violent fight.

Some mediators understand this potential and add strength to the women so they stay strong, can re-spells danger, disaster and sometimes even death for victims who are unable to escape their abusers.

According to Gail Pincus, the director of the Domestic Abuse Center, "The most dangerous time for the battered women is when she decides to leave the batterer; and it is at this time that the case enters the family court system."

All too often the court system begins to focus on custody and visitation, and forgets about the violence. Orders are made to provide parents with frequent access to their children."

"Moreover, 99 percent of all death row inmates came from violent homes."

Pincus hastens to add that the references of batterers as men are based on the statistics verifying that in 95 percent of cases the perpetrator is a male committing acts of violence against a female.

Although battered women are often granted restraining orders designed to provide protection against their abuser, when family courts force visitation and custody orders, they legally entrap victims in an ongoing relationship of abuse.

Women are unable to escape from obsessive and dangerous men who are often capable of serious bodily harm and even murder. Children are forced to spend time alone with parents they may be frightened or, at the very least, are influenced by the values of violent role models.

seeds of future violence.

When the courts force a continuation of abusive relationships, even after battered women have removed their children from danger, they are preventing the protection and safety crucial to the recovery of these victims, and reinforcing the influences that encourages another generation of abuse.

Whether you personally experience abuse in your own household or are forced to deal with the ramifications of our increasingly violent society, family violence is an issue which affects us all.

We all need to be aware of and support legislation that asks our court system to take domestic violence into consideration when awarding custody and visitation. Protective supervision must be encouraged as one of the few weapons that we have to combat the perpetuation of violence.

Letters to the Star

A 'kinder, gentler' censorship

Dear Editor,

Dr. Alejandro Bendana, who was invited to speak to the students and faculty of Los Angeles Valley College on May 18, will not be able to appear. The United States Department of State has refused to grant a visa to Bendana and he has, therefore, been forced to cancel a scheduled tour of American campuses.

Bendana joins a lengthy list of subversive individuals including Graham Greene, Gabriel Garcia Marquez, Carlos Fuentes, Dario Fo, Isabelle Allende and Fr. Ernesto Cardenal, all of whom have been denied entry into the United States because their ideas are contrary to accepted standards of discourse within the American academic community.

Los Angeles Valley College is fortunate that the Bush Administration is willing to protect our academic program from the disruptive intrusion of ideas into the orderly processes of education in this free, democratic, kinder and gentler nation.

Bush faces drug crisis

Dear Editor,

The war on drugs cannot be won by half measures or timidity. The drug lords are on the offensive. The majority of the American people want to get tough on drugs! The government plan is to wimp! There are temporary measures I think should be considered:

- *Suspend the civil rights of those involved in drugs.
- *Give the police extraordinary powers of arrest.
- *Summary execution for those involved in drugs should be discussed.
- *Rewards could be discussed.

Every citizen must get involved, but must be assured of anonymity. We must get on the offensive. President Bush and Drug Czar William Bennet, get tough on drugs or get out!

WW II P-38s to fly again May 19

By BLANCA L. ADAJIAN
Staff Writer

Even before Pearl Harbor, the skies around San Diego were always full of planes. They were prop planes, of course, and they made a lot of noise. You could tell the different roars and, after a while, you didn't bother to look up.

But there was one the kids all waited for. It was sleek and slim, with twin fuselages like a catamaran, and it whipped past you without a sound, so smooth and fast you weren't quite sure if you'd really seen it.

The roar came after.

Even the roar was smooth.

That was the P-38.

The elegant Lightning was perhaps the only plane the American public actually loved just for the look of it.

From "Saluting the Men Who Put the Zoom! in Jets,"
The Washington Post
April 26, 1985

"It is quite amazing to see just how much interest there still is in this old plane," said retired LAVC English Professor Tom C. McGuire.

His eyes light up as he talks of the P-38 and the upcoming P-38 National Association Reunion, May 18-21, 1990 at the Sheraton Universal Hotel.

"This year will be highlighted by two special events on May 19th. There will be flying demonstrations at Chino Airport in two of the few restored P-38s left," he said, "and, on the same day at Santa Monica Airport, they are going to auction off the last flying World War II Japanese Zero as well as a P-38. I understand the starting bids are in the neighborhood of $1.2 million."

McGuire came to Valley in '52 but he was still a student when the United States declared war in late 1941. He enlisted in the Army Air Corps and learned how to fly a plane. "I soloed after only seven hours of instruction and I was made an instructor after basic training. The rest of the war I spent teaching pilots all over the Southwest," he said. "This is how I came to know the P-38."

"During the war, Lockheed kept improving the P-38. Every letter tacked on to the number meant a newer, improved model. If we had had the P-38L at the beginning of the war instead of at the end, it would have made a world of difference."

Professor McGuire retired in 1982 and works with the organization that is putting on the P-38 Reunion. For further information call (818) 994-1018.

U.S. denies speaker access visa

By JOE DON LEWIS
Editor in Chief

The expected visit of keynote speaker Dr. Alejandro Bendana to Valley this Friday was abruptly cancelled when the U.S. State Department rejected his visa without explanation.

The State Department's refusal also forced the cancellation of a scheduled tour by Dr. Bendana of other American campuses, including UCLA and USC.

Dr. Bendana, who has a history of political involvement in Nicaragua, was the former Nicaraguan ambassador to the United Nations and the Organization of American States.

Representing the Center for International Studies, Dr. Bendana was to promote U.S. involvement for research in peace, social change and economic development in Central America.

Although the State Department has not given a reason for the refusal, Juan Morillo, a MEChA member at Valley, believes Dr. Bendana was labeled persona non grata by the State Department to keep his views from being presented.

"It comes to show the hypocrisy of the people involved," Morillo said. "They say we are a free country; democratic. It's not true."

Morillo also said that MEChA, which was to co-sponsor Dr. Bendana's visit to Valley, intends to send a formal letter of protest to the State Department. However, Morillo doubts the letter will effect a change in the decision.

Farrel Broslawsky, a history professor at Valley who assisted in Dr. Bendana's expected visit, shared Morillo's views.

"The U.S. government refuses entrance to those people whose ideas, they feel, would somehow be disruptive," Broslawsky said. "Meaning ideas that they [the U.S. government] does not approve of."

Broslawsky believes the State Department's decision will not be changed by citizens or the media, saying society is largely indifferent or ignorant of American action toward foreign politics and relations.

A press conference will be held this Friday in downtown Los Angeles; Broslawsky will speak for Valley on Dr. Bendana's refused admittance. The exact location could not be determined at press time.

News Notes

FACULTY ASSOC. AWARDS

The Valley College Faculty Association is offering four scholarships to deserving students.

Students must have a GPA of 3.5 or greater in all college class work (Magna Cum Laude) qualification for award of A.A. or A.S. in Spring 1990 and completion of class work in a relatively short period of time.

The submission of three faculty recommendations, completion of an application and mandatory attendance at graduation ceremonies are necessary to receive the scholarship award.

Qualifying students, may pick up an application from the Financial Aid Office, CC100. The deadline for filing is May 18.

HILLEL SCHOLARSHIP

The Valley/Pierce Hillel is offering the Friedman and Kadimah scholarships to Jewish students. A total of $5000 will be available, at the end of the Spring 1990 semester, for the awards.

Students must be enrolled at Valley or Pierce College, have completed 24 units by the end of the spring semester and are making normal progress towards the completion of their studies.

The Kadimah scholarship, in the amount of $500, is earmarked for a Valley or Pierce College student who plans to attend a 4-year college or university in September and has already been admitted to the school of their choice.

Qualifying students may pick up an application from the Hillel office, at 13162 Burbank Blvd. For more information, contact Hillel at (818) 994-7443. The deadline for filing is May 21.

HEALTH SCHOLARSHIP

The Department of Veteran's Affairs is offering scholarships to nursing, physical or occupational therapy students.

Students must be in the final year of an associate degree in nursing program, as well as third and fourth year students in baccalaureate and master's degree programs in nursing and physical or occupational therapy.

Students receive tuition, educational expenses and a monthly stipend of $621 in exchange for serving full-time in a VA medical center.

For more information, write to the VA Health Professional Scholarship Program (143b), Office of Academic Affairs, 810 Vermont Ave. NW, Washington, D.C. 20420, or by calling (202) 233-3652. The deadline for filing is May 29.

"Some of the students are afraid they are not going to succeed because they have been placed in special classes all of their lives," said Scott.

The students do not have individual counselors but are supported through the disabled students program.

Other student panelists included

Brandon Scott, who performed a combination of magic tricks and jokes. He included explanations of his material as he went along.

Chris James added in his speech: "I know where you are at. I have been where you are now."

"Chris motivated many of the students to not give up and to give everything a shot," said Scott.

"Yesterday's orientation was a success," said Scott. "The success of disabled students gives security to others.

"The audience left very surprised as to how they can facilitate their learning and how their possibilities are not limited," said Scott.

"The program answered many of the students questions and concerns about the classes and special events offered at Valley."

Name that Scale!

Violinist Joseph Chamaa introduced LAVC to the Arabic Music Theory. The event took place last week in the Music Recital Hall.

Chamaa's lecture consisted of an analysis of the five important scales and their uses. He also gave a performance of music composed with the Arabic scale.

Chamaa performed with the National Conservatory Symphony Orchestra of Lebanon when he was fifteen years old. Chamaa has studied harmony and orchestration with Pompei Minatto in Italy. Currently, he teaches private violin lessons, as well as performing regularly in hotels and restaurants.

A WORD FROM THE DEAN

'Word' is a biweekly column written by Dean Hotta.

There are few places I would rather not go to than a dance club. The Gulag Archipelago, Sun City and Lebanon immediately come to mind, but this is irrelevant for now.

What is relevant is how I ended up at Florentine Gardens a couple of weeks ago, and how I managed to weather the night without going stark-raving-nutsos.

You see, I don't like dancing; I never did and probably never will. Despite testimony to the contrary, I look like I'm about to avoid an oncoming car when I'm out on the floor.

Concerned onlookers ask whether the seizure I'm suffering is a grand mal or a petit mal. I also have a proclivity, like an NFL linebacker, to take out anyone within eight feet of me, which more often than not includes my partner.

My idea of dancing is nodding my head to the beat and the odd shoulder shrug or two. I leave the dancing to people like Paula Abdul and Janet Jackson; after all, they get paid to dance and I don't, and I'm perfectly happy to leave it at that.

So it's with great trepidation that I accept invitations to go out dancing. I could have lied and said that I had better things to do that night, like filing my nails with an electric sander, but I like my social group, and when they want to go dancing, well, when in Rome...

I used to go out for the drinking aspect, since it was the only way anyone could get me to onto the floor. But I don't drink as much as I used to (all right, you guys can stop laughing now), so there isn't much motivation, chemical or otherwise, to induce me to "shake my booty."

And I hate the stuff that passes for dance music these days. Like Dilaudid, it's synthetic junk. I don't think a natural drum sound has appeared on a dance track since the days of disco, which is what a lot of this stuff is beginning to sound like.

The same annoying 4/4 beat, the same rapid lyrics, the same trendoid fashions... did I say beginning?

At the risk of dating myself, I remember when a good dance song had not only a good beat but also clever verbal puns a la the Miracles' "I Second That Emotion" or the Temptations' "The Way You Do the Things You Do" or gorgeously chiming guitar lines like the Plimsouls' "A Million Miles Away."

These days dancers are treated to vacuous synth-trash such as Depeche Mode's "Enjoy the Silence" (never has a song been so aptly named) or warmed-over raps like "U Can't Touch This" by M.C. Hammer, which takes Rick James' classic "Superfreak" bass riff and cannibalizes it to the point where James should be able to sue, if there's any justice in the world.

Then again, if there was any justice, a benevolent higher being would have struck me with temporary deafness. Come to think of it, I was deaf when I came out, courtesy of the club's megawatt sound system which pummeled any subtleties in the music into submission.

I wanted my $10 cover charge back, as well as the $4 I dished out to that legalized racket known as parking. I also promised not to hold this night against any of the people I went with; after all, I've probably dragged others to places equally unenjoyable.

To paraphrase Voltaire, I do not agree with the concept of dance clubs, but I will, not necessarily to the death, defend their right to exist. Just don't make me go into another one, please?

I understand that the next group outing may involve roller-skating. I wonder how Lebanon is this time of year.

Cruzados to perform at LAVC

By LUTHER E. ORRICK
Staff Writer

What do a "Bed of Lies" and a "Blue Sofa" have in common?

No they aren't titles that deal with furniture. They are songs written by Tito Larriva, the lead singer and songwriter of the Cruzados, who will play in Monarch Square today at 11 a.m.

The Cruzados was originally a punk band called The Plugz which was formed in 1977.

"I met this woman who was married to Marc Bolan from T-Rex," said Larriva. "She told me I was in the wrong business, that I should be in rock 'n' roll."

The Plugz became a successful three-piece punk band that, after a few years, decided to change their name when they got a new lead guitar player.

"We changed our name [and] decided that the last thing we would do as the Plugz was the music for the movie Repo Man," said Larriva.

"The name Cruzados meant getting across the Rio Grande, kind of like a wetback but a better way of saying it," said Larriva. "I liked the idea of going from one country to another without any papers. The name also means when you're f---ed up on drugs and you get cross-eyed."

LUTHER E. ORRICK / Valley Star

BACK IN BLACK — Cruzado Tito Larriva at the Palomino.

None of the members like or promote the use of drugs. "We don't even smoke, which is really unusual," says Larriva. "I used to chain-smoke. When you're chain-smoking on a tour bus it gets annoying."

Currently, the band is working on their third album and want to go on the road again. "I would also like to put out another record as kind of a solo artist and do films," said Larriva. The band is comprised of musicians with great credentials.

Bass player Tony Marsico has played with Bob Dylan and Neil Young. Lead guitarist Jimmy Young currently plays with a band called Slave, while drummer Jerry Angel has performed with Carole King, Mojo Nixon and The Dickies.

Larriva is not only into music, but has a background in theatre and has just completed his first starring role in a movie produced by Michael Douglas. Larriva portrays the antagonist opposite John Travolta.

"The movie is called The Tender. It was fun for me to do, and to get a big meaty part in a movie was good," said Larriva.

Larriva loves to tour, but feels that after a while it gets extremely tiring.

Two years ago, the band was on the road for more than eight months straight as the opening act for INXS. The Cruzados recently performed at The Palomino in North Hollywood, playing to a full house of fans last Cinco De Mayo.

"This wasn't the beginning of a tour; we just wanted to play to see what it felt like again," said Larriva.

State is a reality

Valley sends seven to Santa Barbara

By SHANE POWERS
Sports Editor

Four individuals and the women's mile relay team put themselves in a position to chase gold this weekend at the state track and field finals.

Liz Bouer, Robert Scott, Melanie Clark and Nikyva Prevost qualified in their respective events this past weekend at the state semi-finals in Cerritos.

Liz Bouer placed second in the high jump in Cerritos, with a jump of 6 feet, 8 inches. The jump would have been good enough for a gold, but Bonnie Matthews of Santa Barbara City College cleared the height in fewer attempts than Bouer, making her the winner.

Scott qualified for state in the men's long jump with a jump of 23 feet, 8 inches, which was enough to merit him a fourth place finish in Cerritos and qualify him for the state meet in Santa Barbara this Saturday.

The women's 4x400-meter relay team also fared well in Cerritos, snaring a fourth place finish with a combined time of 3 minutes, 49 seconds.

The relay team is made up of Sabrina Brown, who ran a 58.5 on her leg, followed by Melanie Clark, who blistered the track with a scorching time of 55.4. Jill Cameran and Prevost finished the effort with a 60 flat and a 55.6 to bring it home for the Monarchs.

Clark will also be competing in the heptathlon this weekend, and barring any freak accidents or a major upset, she should bring Valley a gold.

Clark has accumulated more points in the heptathlon than any other athlete this year and if that is any indication to what this weekend will bring, Clark will be a very happy camper by Sunday.

Last, but certainly not least, is Prevost, who is Valley's best hope for a gold.

Prevost has been in contention, either placing first or second in her best event, the 200-meter sprint, at every meet. She has also gained national attention for her times and has signed a national letter of intent with the University of Nebraska, where they have an excellent women's track team.

However, Prevost did not live up to her reputation in Cerritos, as she placed fifth in the 100-meter with a time of 12.04, which is considerably slower than the rest of her times this season.

LEAP UP — SBCC hi-jumper Bonnie Matthews clears the bar at 6 ft. 8 in. to win the event. She will compete at state this weekend. ERIC LAWSON / Valley Star

After 25 years, Head Start still rolling

By DEAN HOTTA
Staff Writer

The sign on the wall of the classroom is hard to miss. Tacked in a prominent position above the teacher's head, the sign reads, A child's play is their work—respect it!

A high degree of respect for children and their work is one of the hallmarks of Head Start, a federal child-care program that is celebrating 25 years of existence as one of the last remaining programs initiated by Lyndon Johnson.

Head Start is a multi-faceted program that covers not only the academic needs of low-income children but their physical and emotional needs as well. It provides transportation to and from the centers, balanced meals, medical and dental care, and it stresses the need for parental involvement in a child's development.

Alicia Lewis has been with Head Start since 1974, starting as a teacher and later the education coordinator for Ventura County. Lewis, 40, has been the program director the past two years.

"My role expanded to being in charge of all the other coordinators and supervisors," Lewis said. "Head Start is divided into block components . . . we have an educational component, a nutritional component, social services, parental involvement . . . then they said, 'Well, if you're coordinating all that, that makes you the P.D.'," she added with a laugh.

Ventura County's Head Start program serves 644 children at 13 sites around the region, "but we're only serving about 10% of the children we could be serving," Lewis said. "We really do need to expand our services and serve more families."

The Ventura program recently received a grant of $2,166,000 from the federal government, more than half of which will go toward teachers' salaries.

Wage scales range from $7.22 to $12.19 an hour, depending on whether they have been accredited or have received a bachelor's degree in child development. The national average annual earnings for Head Start teachers is $15,043, about $13,000 less than the average for a public schoolteacher.

ERIC LAWSON / Valley Star

READING IS FUNDAMENTAL — Hardip Bains, Juan Garcia and Megan Miltko during a reading session. All three are pupils at Shepherd of the Valley, a Head Start school in Simi Valley.

It is the primary reason why there is a dearth of male teachers in the program. Out of the 60 teachers and teacher's assistants in the Ventura program, there are currently two male teachers and one male T.A., according to Lewis.

"Another thing that hurts us is the McMartin case," Lewis said. "Men are more leery to be around children and show affection toward them. Children really do need to be touched in the right way . . . they need lots of love, but I think that has scared a lot of people from wanting to get into child-care."

A heavily-stressed part of Head Start is the parental aspect. Home Base is a branch program in which a teacher works with a family and works one-to-one with the parents.

"If we work with the parent, that makes the biggest impact on a child," Lewis said. "Home Base has been real successful, but it's very expensive."

In addition to the teachers and a T.A., one of who must be bilingual, at least one parent volunteer is present during a daily class session.

Lorena Miltko, a volunteer at the Simi Valley Head Start school, is impressed with the program.

"You see the difference between kids that go to Head Start and the kids that don't," Miltko said as she watched her daughter Megan play. "They're more emotionally and physically ready for kindergarten after they leave the program."

Beyond volunteering for supervisory duties, parents are encouraged to become more involved with making ground-level decisions. A Head Start Policy Council, consisting of a parent from each county site, convenes once a month to discuss changes in the program, review budgets and make suggestions.

"It's a nice, non-intimidating environment for parents to come into," Lewis said. "We talk on their level, and if they're ready for leadership, we take them on a weekend retreat and train them so that when they come to the meetings they don't say, 'What are you talking about?' When they make decisions, they are informed—they're not a rubber-stamp committee."

Head Start has endured and survived 25 years despite nearly being terminated by the Nixon Administration and political apathy. As successful as the program has been, there is still much to be done.

"I think politically things have gotten better for child-care [and] business people see it as an investment," Lewis said. "But I don't know whether people have really changed or understand or value children anymore; I think this country values children very little."

7 hours in the life of a pre-school

At Shepherd of the Valley, the church serving as Head Start's Simi Valley branch, the seven hours a day spent teaching pre-schoolers about the world around them translates into a lifetime of memories and habits. The following is a capsule description of a typical day in the middle of March.

7:58 a.m.: The first group of children from nearby Moorpark arrives, ushered in by teacher Marian Sievers. Most are brought by bus; a few are driven by their parents.

8:10 a.m.: A breakfast of French toast, applesauce and milk is served. The children take their places at Liliputian tables and eat quietly.

8:30 a.m.: Breakfast is over. The bus tray is almost immaculate; plates are neatly stacked in one corner, silverware in another, plastic glasses taking up the remaining space.

As a couple of children trickle in, Sievers looks at teaching assistant Connie Ocampo, saying, "I hope Margaret comes today."

8:51 a.m.: An outdoor jungle gym is set up for playtime, though tricycles seem to be the preferred mode of self-entertainment. Two parents are present as volunteer supervisors, watching the kids jockeying for position on the gym and restoring order when needed.

9:18 a.m.: Ocampo takes a recent addition to the program in for a DIAL test, which measures motor and language skills and concept-grasping. The girl seems perplexed at some of the questions, despite Ocampo's Spanish translation.

ERIC LAWSON / Valley Star

Lisa Hauck and Alma Rosa Rivera follow Piol's lead. Right, Merritt and classmate Helen Dinh are caught in a moment of creativity.

Nevertheless, her skills are comparable to others of her age group.

10:33 a.m.: After making cardboard leprechaun hats for the upcoming St. Patrick's Day, the kids are gathered for a spirited rendition of "Farmer in the Dell." Before being dismissed for lunch, each child executes a stop-drop-and-roll, the maneuver for putting a fire out.

11:15 a.m.: The children clean up after themselves, picking up stray books and blocks. Twenty minutes later the Moorpark group leaves and the Simi Valley children enter. Sievers attends to paperwork and teacher Olivia Piol takes over with her T.A., Lorna Hernandez.

Although the afternoon's agenda is more or less the same as the morning's, the kids are more energetic, and could probably be used to supply the power needs of a small town.

1 p.m.: After lunch, a reading session and a period of playtime, Piol and Hernandez take their 17 charges on a "nature walk" through a nearby field. Shopping bags in hand, the children collect seeds, stems and whatever items strike their fancy for use in a later art project.

Two little girls, Christin and Angeline, show me their newfound items before putting them in their bags. As they scurry about, I marvel at their undiminished energy and enthusiasm.

1:26 p.m.: The agenda calls for a rest time, which is sorely needed by the teachers as well as the children. One child falls asleep, and I am tempted to do the same.

2:13 p.m.: The kids are revved up again, dancing to a tune which has no chance of reaching the Top 40 but engages them all the same. Another story is read and a snack of zucchini bread is served.

2:54 p.m.: The children are sent home with a hug from Piol. One boy, noticing me sitting in the corner, comes over and gives me a hug.

Christin comes over and gives me a sticker depicting a unicorn. I ask her why she's giving it to me, since she earned it for good behavior.

"Well, you were pretty good too," Christin says. She bounds out to the bus and the day is over.

—D.H.
